Disaster at Museum!

A. The Fitzwilliam Museum in Cambridge was founded in 1816 and has a large number of world-famous paintings and fine ceramics. Wednesday 25th January 2006 was another ordinary day in the museum. Visitors were walking quietly around the galleries and looking at the museum's collection of masterpieces.

B. Suddenly, the staff heard a very loud noise and they ran to the museum's staircase. At the bottom of the stairs, they found a man who was surrounded by broken vases.

C. The staff soon learnt the whole story. The visitor, Nick Flynn, was tying his shoelaces when he fell down the stairs. He hit a large jar and two vases which were standing on a big windowsill next to the staircase. They immediately fell over and broke into hundreds of pieces.

D. The jar and the vases are extremely valuable and were given to the museum by Anthony de Rothschild in 1948. They were made in China in the late seventeenth century and are very large. The jar is eighty centimetres high and weighs around forty-five kilograms. Two people are needed to carry it.

E. Fortunately, the story has a happy ending. Nick Flynn was unhurt and the museum accepted that it was an accident. The jar and the two vases were carefully restored. It took seven months to put them back together. They are now on display again at the museum - but this time they are in strong glass cases.
